Art and Design

Visitors to Neues Museum in Nuremberg, designed by Berlin architect Volker Staab, encounter bold architecture providing an excellent setting for presenting art and design.

Transparent and spacious, the urban structure's trademarks are its gently curving glass façade and spiral staircase visible from some distance. A total of 3,000 m² is available for the collection and presentations. Since its opening in 2000, Neues Museum shows art and design from the 1950s through to the present day. Seldom do you find free and applied art presented like this in juxtaposition, providing insights into important aspects of the development of international contemporary art and design history. In the area of design the museum cooperates with Die Neue Sammlung – The International Design Museum Munich.

Exhibitions

Neues Museum has set itself the task of taking up current movements in contemporary art and design, visualizing developments with large shows and exploring future trends. Not only the exhibition hall but also foyers, façade spaces and the museum forecourt regularly serve as display areas for alternating exhibitions on contemporary art and international design, for which Neues Museum also teams up with cooperation partners. Diverse accompanying programs enable an in-depth examination of the respective work.

Collection presentations

In the collection rooms there is an emphasis on regular change. The selection of exhibited items alters constantly, and re-arrangements repeatedly create different associations, while independent presentations in the collection halls make for a startling change of perspective. Amongst other things, there is a focus in the collection on works by East European artists, international works of geometric abstraction and Concrete Art, Fluxus and installation art.
